John Cangemi was introduced and presented a discussion on the PPE requirements within the electrical ind.

The Public Employees Occupational Safety and Health (PEOSH) has the responsibility in NJ for public employees health in NJ.

John stated that the NEC is the code and 70E is the standard for safety

All employer must access the workplace for hazards and establish safeguards to protect employees from any harmful conditions. If you are a sub contractor you must follow the safety rules of your employer plus your own rules

If you follow 70E requirements you will usually meet any OSHA requirements.

OSHA provides the shall and 70E provides the how.

John demonstrated the boundaries and what type of PPE must be used within each area.

Getting closer to the high hazard the higher level of personal protection increases.

John now employed by Burlington Safety Laboratory presented Peter Senin, Pres. of Burlington Safety Labs. who gave a short talk about the testing of electrical work gloves. He stated that the test verification label is good for one year unopened once opened the gloves must be retested every six months.
